2 History of the Genestealer Cults

The Genestealer Curse is a parasitic infection of mind, body, and soul that gnaws at the heart of the Imperium. Hybrids of xenos and humans, gifted with limitless patience and an implacable hatred of the Imperium, these zealots of the Genestealer Cults prepare their offensive across several generations before erupting from the darkest corners of Humanity's domain. Thousands of cultists pray to their Patriarch, a living god from beyond the stars, and when the grim and glorious day of a Genestealer Cult's uprising comes, its warriors already hold a tenfold advantage. Saboteurs have wrecked supply lines, hidden agents have assassinated the principal commanders, and evacuation routes have been cut by demolition teams and industrial mining charges. Ammunition crates have been looted, fuel reserves run dry, transports have been diverted, and the support fleet, scuttled, drifts in orbit.

Experts in ambush, they strike from nowhere to sow ruin with firepower or with lightning raids. Guided by a monstrous Patriarch, this armada of zealous worshippers, industrial machines converted into engines of war, devastating xenos hybrids, and cunning leaders gifted with special powers has every means of securing victory. Armed transports surge from civilian dwellings to carry their monstrous passengers to the front, while charismatic leaders and agents possessed of supernatural faculties dismantle the enemy armies. When the cult unleashes the xenos monstrosities that serve as its shock troops, the enemy is already surrounded and trapped, weakened at leisure in preparation for a massacre planned long in advance.

Humanity is assailed from every side by xenos raiders and the nightmarish forces of Chaos. Each day, billions of lives are sacrificed upon the altar of war to hold the foe at bay. Yet the most insidious threat to Humanity's survival may already have entered the Imperium's bloodstream. Nested within the infrastructure of countless seemingly loyal worlds, Genestealer Cults wait, spreading their corruption through the population until the day they are ready to launch their bloody insurrections. On that day they pour forth, armed with stolen Imperial weapons and industrial tools turned to ignoble ends. Discovered upon the moons of Ymgarl, Genestealers were at first thought to be a unique species. After a series of searching investigations, the Ordo Xenos realised that they formed the vanguard of the Tyranid Hive Fleets, deployed ahead of their approach to sow discord and fear in their wake. Robust and armed with razor-sharp claws capable of shearing through armour, Genestealers serve as shock troops for the Hive Fleets.

When a Genestealer reaches a prey world, its macabre work begins. Within a few years it will have abducted hundreds of civilians and infected them with Tyranid genetic material. In time its victims will spawn filthy xenos-and-human Hybrids. The descendants of the first infected bear clearly identifiable xenos traits: broad, bulbous heads and sharpened talons. As the corruption spreads, later generations can pass for human and melt into the population, even into Imperial organisations such as the Adeptus Arbites, the Munitorum, and the Astra Militarum.

As it develops, the cult creates more specialised Hybrids to serve the Genestealer, now worshipped as a Patriarch. Gifted with psychic powers and corrupted by the Patriarch's will, Maguses are tasked with converting highly placed targets within the planet's army and government. Crowds of Hybrids are led by Primuses, generals and ambush specialists charged with coordinating the coming uprising. With an incomparable eye for detail and contingency, Nexoses provide tactical support to their Primuses' strategies. Sanctuses serve as assassins and Loci as bodyguards, while Clamavuses preach the cult's word and cut enemy communications. Atalan Jackals race into battle on dirtcycles and Wolfquads, harrying the enemy flanks, while Genestealers and Aberrants—sometimes reinforced by gene-chemists called Biophaguses—serve as shock troops.

With uncontrollable violence, the cultists' uprising falls upon those who represent the greatest threat to their plans. Deafening discharges of seismic cannons shatter bone, rock drills plunge into flesh in a spray of blood, and explosives are used as makeshift grenades. The cult at last unveils its banners and seals: Acolyte Iconwards brandish its standards and worm-shaped totems, their presence driving the broods to new peaks of savagery.

Often the trigger for this uprising is the approach of a Tyranid bio-fleet, regarded by the cult as saviours. When the Hive Fleet vomits its swarms of warrior-creatures through the world's atmosphere, the cultists raise fervent prayers to their liberators. Even as the Tyranids exterminate and devour every source of biomass on the planet, the cultists continue to believe that these voracious xenos will elevate the faithful and help them transcend their mortal weaknesses, eagerly awaiting the community they were promised. For a time at least, Tyranids and cultists fight together, the Hive Mind ensuring that the former do not fall upon the latter. Maguses project illusions that warp and lacerate enemy minds, driving them to turn upon one another with sadistic pleasure. Directing their troops with remarkable skill, the Patriarch's generals sacrifice thousands of their warriors to open a path for the Tyranid assault. In this last exalted hour the Patriarch itself joins the melee, and its faithful sink into a frenetic trance as they watch their prophet massacre the infidels with claw and fang.

As soon as the last defenders are overwhelmed by this wave of chitin and razor-sharp claws, the Hive Mind subjects the Patriarch to its consciousness. It becomes an anonymous cell in the Tyranid swarm, and the gestalt called the Broodmind that united its cult is severed. In that tragic instant the cultists at last understand the truth. These stellar creatures they regarded as gods are revealed as the instrument of their death, for the Tyranids have only contempt for flesh.

3 Special Rules

3.1 Blip Counters

For every Company Formation in the Genestealer Cult army, you receive 2 Blip counters. Blips are placed before deployment, immediately after objectives are placed, in the Genestealer Cult player's own half of the table. These Blips may be revealed in several ways:

- At the Genestealer Cult player's choice during the Movement Phase or the Combat Phase.
- If an enemy detachment ends its movement within 20 cm of a Blip.

When a Blip is revealed, the player may choose to associate a detachment in reserve with it, or simply remove it with no further effect. If a detachment is associated with the Blip, place the detachment's bases within 6 cm of the counter and outside every enemy zone of control (as for Deep Strike (2)). The detachment may have any order (including First Fire) and does not lose movement if it arrives via a Blip.

Any number of Class 1 detachments may be placed in reserve and may enter the table via Blips. Another way to bring reserve troops onto the table is to place them in contact with a table edge during the Initial Phase, during Off-Table Arrivals. According to the turn, the following table edges are available:

- Turn 1: the edge of the player's deployment zone.
- Turn 2: a table edge of the player's half of the table.
- Turn 3 and later: any table edge except the enemy deployment zone.

Once the detachment is placed on the table, it acts as any other detachment, according to its order. Blips capture objectives for as long as they remain unrevealed.

4 Special Abilities

4.1 Slave (Instinct)

Slave detachments follow their Instinct order if either of the following applies:

- They are outside the Synapse radius of a Synapse base during the Orders step.
- They have failed a Hive Mind Test.

All movement required by an Instinct order is performed normally during the Movement Phase.

4.1.1 Hunt

During the Movement Phase, a detachment with this Instinct moves its normal Movement characteristic towards the closest enemy detachment that is not already engaged in an assault. If it makes contact, it engages that detachment in an assault.

If the detachment is not engaged in an assault, it must shoot at the closest valid enemy detachment during the Combat Phase.

4.1.2 Devastation

During the Movement Phase, a detachment with this Instinct must move twice its normal Movement characteristic towards the closest enemy detachment.

If the closest enemy detachment is already engaged in an assault, it may instead move towards the second-closest enemy detachment.

If it makes contact with an enemy, it engages that enemy in an assault. A detachment following the Devastation Instinct never makes ranged attacks.

4.1.3 Nest

A detachment with this Instinct does not move. During the Combat Phase, it must shoot at the closest visible enemy detachment.

This is not a First Fire order. The detachment therefore cannot:

- Perform Overwatch Fire.
- Reroll results of 1 on its To-Hit rolls.
- Perform Indirect Fire.

The detachment must shoot at an enemy even if that enemy is engaged in an assault.

If a detachment following an Instinct order uses a template weapon, centre the template over the closest enemy base.

4.2 Semi-Synaptic (Instinct)

Detachments with this ability may receive orders normally, even while outside a Synapse radius.

If they fail a Hive Mind Test, they act as Slave creatures and follow their listed Instinct.

4.3 Synapse (X cm)

Detachments with this ability receive orders normally.

They may also control Slave detachments if at least one base from the Slave detachment is within X cm of a Synapse base.

Detachments arriving through the Tunneller or Mycetic Spore rules may receive an order if they are within the Synapse radius of a base when they arrive.

The Synapse radius functions even if the Synapse base or the Slave bases are inside transports.

A Synapse base attached to a detachment grants the Synapse ability to the entire detachment.

A detachment following an Instinct order loses its Synapse ability.

4.4 Genestealer Assassins

Assassins are not represented by a model on the battlefield. They are used once during the game, complete their mission, and withdraw. Assassins are used in the Combat Phase. The same Assassin formation may be used only once per game. Because they cannot be destroyed in the usual manner, the Assassin is considered Broken when it is used. There are 3 types of assassin that may be employed. Once army lists are known but before deployment, you must tell your opponent which type of assassin you choose. You cannot take the same assassin again until you have taken one of each.

4.4.1 Sanctus Hybrid Assassin

[Combat Phase, counts as an activation]: Choose an HQ base that is not inside a transport. Immediately resolve an assault between the target and the Genestealer Assassin (AF +5). If the target is already engaged in an assault, the activation triggers the assault in its entirety. The Genestealer Assassin receives the bonuses for previous attackers and also counts among the previous attackers for subsequent opponents of its target.

4.4.2 Reductus Saboteur

[Combat Phase, counts as an activation]: Place a 7.5 cm template anywhere on the table. It inflicts a hit on a 3+ with AP -2.

4.4.3 Sanctus Sniper Assassin

[Combat Phase, counts as an activation]: Choose an enemy HQ or Character base that is on the table and that can be chosen as a shooting target, ignoring the usual target-selection restrictions and the HQ rule. The target is hit by a shot that hits on a 3+ with AP -2, has the Reduces Cover (-1) ability, and may reroll results of 1 on its rolls as if it were on First Fire.

4.5 Genomic Enhancements

Genomic Enhancements allow you to choose one enhancement for the detachment attached to the base with this ability, chosen from the following list:

- A +1 bonus to Assault Factor.
- A 5 cm increase to base Movement.
- Regeneration (5+).

Choose the desired effect before the battle begins, at the moment of deployment.

5 Psychic Powers

5.1 Magus

5.1.1 Hypnotic Gaze

[Movement Phase, upon activation]: The Magus gains the Dread (−1) ability until the end of the turn.

5.1.2 Mental Domination

[Movement Phase, upon activation]: All detachments from this codex within 40 cm of the Magus may reroll failed Morale Tests for the remainder of the turn.

5.1.3 Mental Lightning

[Combat Phase, Shooting]: Choose a target within 45 cm and in Line of Sight. The target is hit on a 4+. This is a Psychic Attack. If the target has a hit-location template, make a Damage roll against the Head or Bridge.

5.2 Patriarch

5.2.1 Hypnotic Gaze

[Movement Phase, upon activation]: During activation, choose an enemy detachment within 30 cm and in Line of Sight. The detachment must pass a Morale Test at −2. If it fails, the detachment loses its order and rolls 1 fewer die in assault.

5.2.2 Frenzy

[Movement Phase, upon activation]: Choose a detachment from this codex within 45 cm. That detachment gains 5 cm to its base Movement, a +1 bonus to its AF, and rerolls its assault dice until the end of the turn.

5.2.3 Mental Lightning

[Combat Phase, Shooting]: Choose a target within 45 cm and in Line of Sight. The target is hit on a 4+. This is a Psychic Attack. If the target has a hit-location template, make a Damage roll against the Head or Bridge.

5.3 Hybrid Psyker

5.3.1 Psychic Overload

[Movement Phase, upon activation]: The Hybrid Psyker gains the Leader ability until the end of the turn.

5.3.2 Swarm Telepathy

[Movement Phase, upon activation]: The Hybrid Psyker acts as a Forward Observer. However, it may use the Line of Sight of an allied model within 45 cm instead of its own. That model need not be in Line of Sight of the Hybrid Psyker.

5.3.3 Mental Lightning

[Combat Phase, Shooting]: Choose a target within 45 cm and in Line of Sight. The target is hit on a 4+. This is a Psychic Attack. If the target has a hit-location template, make a Damage roll against the Head or Bridge.

8.1 Acolyte Iconward

The most intelligent and capable of the Acolytes are entrusted with a sacred task: to bear the colours of the cult in battle. Although the cult's symbols and slogans spread as it gains influence, they remain cryptic, their meaning known to few. When the Primus and the Magus raise their troops for the final insurrection, however, the most privileged Acolytes present themselves with standards lovingly fashioned by the infected creatures that gave them birth. In rituals, these banners receive the cult's icon, no longer hidden, but displayed in vivid colours. It has the HQ, Charismatic (12 cm), and Attached Character abilities.

8.2 Aberrant

Misshapen, simple-minded, and possessed of superhuman strength, Aberrants are a repulsive offshoot of a brood's cycle. Their protective instinct towards their brothers in the cult makes them precious assets. In battle they drag themselves towards the largest pockets of resistance. Then they raise heavy industrial tools and mutter praises to the Patriarch as they charge, inflicting impressive carnage through brute strength and determination. They have the Slave (Devastation) ability.

8.3 Acolytes

Because of their obviously xenos traits, Acolytes do not blend into human society as the third and fourth generations do, but infest the forgotten underways of urban and industrial sprawls. There they learn the arts of stealth and ambush by falling upon those who venture into their territory. They do not kill with impunity, for nothing must alert the ruling classes of their world to the underground threat until the hour has come. Intruders who are not torn apart are dragged into the darkness to meet a less enviable fate: the dreadful embrace of a Genestealer.

They have the Slave (Hunt) ability.

8.4 Biophagus

Masters of genetic manipulation and bio-alchemy, Biophaguses are charged with industrialising the processes of indoctrination and infection. They concoct new means of contaminating their victims, altering bodies and minds to make them more susceptible to the cult's influence. Biophaguses can pass themselves off as medicae specialists in slum hospitals, or in macro-alchemical distilleries and medi-paste factories. Established in highly placed posts, they test the local population with impunity and conduct experiments upon their own kind.

8.5 Infantry Cannon

This heavy weapon consists of an automatic cannon firing dense, solid, large-calibre projectiles at high muzzle velocity that pierce armour. It can annihilate light and medium vehicles. The Autocannon is regularly employed by the Imperial Guard. A single operator is enough to fire it, but two are better for moving and setting it up.

8.6 Genestealer Assassin

Genestealer Assassins are terrible unseen agents, able to strike their enemy and vanish before it can react. They travel the underhives without being spotted and can infiltrate the most secure places unnoticed. Their mission is to strike enemy leaders or installations of strategic importance, sowing chaos in the opponent's chains of command or supply so that it is less able to react when the cult launches its final assault. They have the Genestealer Assassins ability.

8.7 Alpha Genestealer

The product of the Genestealers' constant evolution, Alphas are the ultimate close-combat warriors. Terrifyingly strong and fast, their diamond-hard claws can tear through adamantium as if it were paper. These organisms are generally deployed in the vanguard, at the head of Genestealer swarms, in order to infiltrate enemy positions. Their role is to launch devastating attacks against those adversaries that pose the greatest threat to the rest of the horde.

They have the Infiltration, HQ, Attached Character, Elite (1), Synapse (15 cm), and Damage (+1) in assault abilities.

8.8 Genestealers

As the first Tyranid organism discovered by the Imperium, Genestealers are one of the species composing the Hive Fleets' armies about which the most information has been gathered. Until now, the majority of those encountered have displayed very similar behaviour and physiology, but some specimens possess evolutionary biomorphs that prove categorically that their species does not conform to a strict biological model. One of their strangest faculties, to which they owe their name, is this ability to assimilate the genetic heritage of their hosts. 8.9 Genestealer Cultists

The Genestealer Curse is a parasitic infection of mind, body, and soul that gnaws at the heart of the Imperium. Hybrids of xenos and humans, gifted with limitless patience and an implacable hatred of the Imperium, these zealots of the Genestealer Cults prepare their offensive across several generations before erupting from the darkest corners of Humanity's domain. Thousands of cultists pray to their Patriarch, a living god from beyond the stars, and when the grim and glorious day of a Genestealer Cult's uprising comes, its warriors already hold a tenfold advantage.

8.10 Hybrid

Repulsive, cruel, and gifted with animal cunning, Hybrids are the principal disciples of the Genestealer Cult. They are the offspring of the first infected hosts. Although in appearance the Hybrids' parents are healthy, part of their mind has been stolen by the Genestealer Curse. Their love for their hideous progeny is more intense than the usual bond between parents and children. The first generation born is altered by the germs implanted in the parents; these Hybrids resemble Tyranids more than modified humans. Those who reach maturity then reproduce, in turn spawning new generations.

They have the Semi-Synaptic (Devastation) ability.

Stoic and of inhuman patience, the Locus can pass in a flash from threatening immobility to a whirlwind of motion. This sudden eruption of violence is as shocking as it is deadly. Like a Lictor bursting from the darkness, the Locus strikes swiftly to behead the enemy, its sabres glittering across the battlefield to shear the head from its victim. Gifted with a Genestealer's reaction speed, the Locus's martial prowess equals that of an Aeldari Exarch. The Locus excels in the role of bodyguard, on the battlefield as at the negotiating table: faced with the threat of its mere presence, few dare to thwart its master's ambitions.

Yet despite their presence and mental faculties, each Magus is only an extension of its Patriarch's will, just as the latter is the incarnation of the great Hive Mind.

8.14 Patriarch

At the centre of the web of every Genestealer Cult infestation sits the Patriarch, father of a hidden dynasty. As tall as two Space Marines and possessing enough strength to reduce an Ogryn to a heap of meat, this creature is a nightmare of fangs and claws. In a series of blows from diamond-hard talons, the Patriarch can carve through platoons of warriors in heavy armour, or even vehicles. Yet it is the hypnotic spell with which it binds its hosts that marks it as the most dangerous Tyranid ever identified by the Imperium. Its supernatural powers make it a formidable puppeteer, a threat so great that it possesses its own xenocode designation.

It has the HQ, Psychic Save (4+), Regeneration (4+), Charismatic (40 cm), Elite (2), Synapse (40 cm), Psyker, and Character abilities. The Patriarch may use one of its powers each turn.

Neophytes are the cultists of the third and fourth generations. They form the line infantry and the bulk of the cult's warriors. They are fiercely devoted to the cult and in particular to the Patriarch at its heart, and dedicate every moment of their existence to the fulfilment of its dark designs. The mental and spiritual bond to the cult is so strong that they are happy to launch themselves into suicide attacks or to give their lives in exchange for the survival of their elders. If their leaders demand that they work for years to gain the trust of a human organisation, they will do so without complaint.

10 Walkers

10.1 Armoured Sentinel

Armoured Sentinels march alongside tank columns or at the head of Astra Militarum infantry formations, devastating the enemy without slowing their pace. The Scout Sentinel is not designed to fight on the front line. The open crew compartment is intended to offer an optimal field of vision, but it leaves the walker vulnerable to small-arms fire. In order to remain mobile, the walker's armour also lacks the layers of ferro-steel that protect battle tanks. Sentinels become excellent assault units when they receive reinforced armour, allowing them to advance through a hail of fire that would have finished a lighter walker. The mechanical legs of an Armoured Sentinel are modified with recoil compensators in place of gyrostabilisers, so that the walker can be given greater firepower at the expense of speed.

Armoured Sentinels have the Slave (Hunt) ability.

Scout Sentinels are equipped with sophisticated gyrostabilisers in order to negotiate the steepest slopes and the craters of the battlefield. Their articulated legs allow them to pass silently through ruins or undergrowth, while remaining capable of rapid acceleration in open terrain.

Basilisks can be reloaded, and fired in a relatively short time, and the design of the Earthshaker Cannon allows it to be elevated high enough to fire its shells in an arc towards concealed targets. They can thus be deployed out of the enemy's reach, sheltered from any return fire. Its lack of armour, coupled with an open platform that exposes the crew, makes it too vulnerable to enemy fire during an assault.

They are seen only rarely, however, except during campaigns in which their siege mortars—of unprecedented calibre—are required to atomise enemy positions.

Goliaths are robust transports originally designed to carry Imperial overseers through underground complexes and mining tunnels. The vehicle's dense construction can withstand the most hostile subterranean environments, and it is covered in layers of chemically treated permacite to offer a measure of protection against every industrial accident the Imperium has already faced. An ascending cult will use every type of vehicle, from lunar quads to stretched civilian cars, not forgetting mobile industrial macro-platforms, but the Goliath remains the most prized.

11.4 Hellhound

Many Flamer weapons tend to suffer from a lack of ammunition capacity, requiring a considerable quantity of fuel to maintain a regular rate of fire. The Hellhound circumvents the problem by sacrificing the Chimera's transport capacity in favour of more powerful engines and prometheum tanks, feeding the monstrous turret Flamer—the aptly named Inferno Cannon—which projects a spontaneously combusting fluid. Generally deployed in dense terrain, the Hellhound's principal role is as a terror weapon during intense engagements, such as street fighting, or against enemies concealed—and easily flushed out—in bunkers and other earthworks.

Both of the Hellhound's weapons have the Reduces Cover (−3) ability, and its Inferno Cannon has the Turret ability. In addition, the Hellhound has the Slave (Hunt) ability.

It can maintain a high rate of fire and has effective firepower against infantry and light vehicles, allowing heavier weapons to concentrate on tougher targets. Well used, the Griffon is perfectly suited both to defensive fire and to close support during offensive operations, and it is a tactically versatile weapon when it employs different types of ammunition.

The most widespread variant of the Goliath is the Rockgrinder. The enormous crushing blade at the front of the Rockgrinder possesses series of grinders capable of milling veins of ore and driving tunnels through bedrock. Their use is far more sinister in time of war. When the order is given to abandon all caution in favour of a general attack, the Rockgrinder's driver will race towards the front line, its gunner projecting tongues of blazing prometheum to keep the enemy's head down until impact.

11.7 Hellhound Devil Dog

On the Devil Dog, the Hellhound's principal armament gives way to a squat fusion cannon. The tank's name comes from the high-pitched hiss this weapon produces, which allows the Devil Dog to engage targets far more heavily armoured than itself. Indeed, Devil Dog crews often see themselves as big-game hunters, practised in the pursuit of tanks as well as exceptionally resilient infantry. An enemy engaged in a prolonged campaign in dense terrain against the Astra Militarum learns to dread the compact silhouette of the Devil Dog, and those who do not feel this salutary fear find their vehicles reduced to slag by this fast and aggressive tank hunter.

The simplicity of this tank makes it easy to manufacture and maintain, so that it is produced by the million upon Forge Worlds and in the hive factories of the entire galaxy, and Imperial armies can field several dozen companies of Leman Russes in order to overwhelm the adversary, thus providing the regiments of the Imperial Guard and the Planetary Defence Forces with a powerful armoured support indispensable for survival on the brutal and implacable battlefields of the 41st Millennium. Only the most powerful shots succeed in penetrating its thick armour, allowing this vehicle to defend strategic positions, while its varied armament allows it to punch through enemy lines with ease when it goes on the offensive. Its simple and robust design has allowed it to stand the test of centuries, while its versatility and ease of construction make it one of the tanks most in demand among Guard officers.

The Annihilator is favoured in war zones where the rate of tank attrition is high and resupply poses a problem. As a result, the powerful foundries of Mars and the principal Forge Worlds of Ryza and Accatran have begun to produce the Leman Russ Annihilator in increasing numbers to meet demand following battlefield losses, and a number of other Forge Worlds across the galaxy are pressing for unrestricted access to the tank's plans.

11.11 Leman Russ Demolisher

The Leman Russ Demolisher is a heavily armoured mobile siege tank, used almost exclusively when Command seeks a breakthrough. This tank was built for one role: to break the lines. Thanks to its reinforced frontal armour, the Demolisher is able to advance under heavy fire in order to bring its cannon within range of an enemy fortress or other fortification. Its Demolisher Cannon possesses staggering destructive power, allowing it to dominate every short-range engagement, and can explode all but the most heavily reinforced structures, with the result that a breach is created through which armour and other infantry can fall upon those who have somehow managed to withstand the Demolisher's devastating barrage.

Its Demolisher Cannon has the Turret and Reduces Cover (−3) abilities, while its Flamer has the Reduces Cover (−3) ability, and the Leman Russ Demolisher has the Slave (Hunt) ability.

11.12 Leman Russ Exterminator

The Leman Russ Exterminator is a widespread variant of the standard pattern, replacing its battle cannon with Twin Autocannons. Generally equipped with multiple Heavy Bolters mounted in turrets and on the hull for additional firepower, the Leman Russ Exterminator can unleash a true uninterrupted hail of projectiles that easily shred light armour and infantry within range of its crew's guns. In particular, by forgoing its anti-tank effectiveness for increased anti-infantry firepower, the Exterminator comes into its own when deployed against hordes of lightly equipped enemy troops such as Ork mobs or Tyranid swarms. Thus, even if it lacks the reach of the other variants, the Leman Russ Exterminator can decimate infantry in the blink of an eye, before they reach the Astra Militarum's lines.

11.14 Medusa

Unlike Imperial artillery pieces that project their shells over enemy walls, the Medusa sends its own directly against the ramparts in question, turning them into rubble and opening a breach so that infantry can mount the assault. Long sieges are generally accompanied by the dull report of the Medusas' siege cannons, firing day and night from entrenched and well-protected positions, and once they have carved a path through the walls and the area has been secured, the Medusas will advance to support the assault, flattening several buildings with each shell until, street by street, the city is nothing more than a field of ruins and the enemy has nowhere left to hide. 11.15 Leman Russ Punisher

The Punisher exchanges its anti-tank capabilities for the ability to massacre infantry. It is based on the standard Leman Russ pattern, but with a number of modifications that allow it to fulfil a vital heavy anti-infantry role which, according to some, has long been lacking among Imperial Guard regiments. Like the Leman Russ Executioner and the Demolisher, it is more heavily armoured to protect itself against point-blank attacks, but where the Demolisher was created to destroy enemy fortifications at range, the Leman Russ Punisher is more effective at destroying enemy infantry at close quarters, especially during attacks orchestrated by massive armies such as Ork and Tyranid xenos.

11.16 Thunderbolt

The Thunderbolt is the single-seat heavy fighter on the Imperium's front lines. It is the mainstay of the Aeronautica Imperialis's wings, a versatile, robust, and well-armed fighter with a good top speed and good manoeuvrability. It is greatly appreciated by its crews and has given good service for many centuries. Durable and reliable in combat, the Thunderbolt's principal role is that of an air-superiority fighter, required to seek out and engage enemy aircraft in violent combats or to hunt opposing bombers in order to establish air superiority over the battlefield. One of the Thunderbolt's strengths is its versatility, with good performance as a high-altitude escort fighter or low-altitude fighter-bomber, as a night fighter, or even as a reconnaissance aircraft.

The Thunderbolt fighter has the Integral Armour, Dodge (5+), Flyer, and Interceptor abilities.

11.17 Vulture

The Vulture is closely related to the Valkyrie. Whereas the Valkyrie is a transport aircraft intended to deliver troops and equipment into the combat zone, the Vulture is a multi-role gunship, replacing the transport compartment in favour of a large weapons load. Like the Valkyrie, it is much slower than a Lightning or a Thunderbolt, but it carries a far greater weapons load for its size. Its ability to hover over the battlefield means that it is always close to the action and in direct support of the ground battle. Vultures generally fly in support of Valkyrie operations, providing significant firepower when airborne troops enter play.

The Vulture has the Integral Armour and Flyer abilities.

11.18 Termite

A specialised transport vehicle, the Termite is capable of deploying a complete platoon of warriors onto the battlefield while bypassing enemy fortifications and sentries. It is able to dig tunnels rapidly through the densest materials at speeds comparable to those of surface transport engines, thanks to its mill, which uses a set of flux-cutters and phase-shield generators to assist its progress. Once at its target location, it emerges at the surface, or even directly into the lower level of macro-fortifications, scattering nearby enemies with its fusion cutters before disgorging its deadly cargo.

It has the Deep Strike (2), Attached Transport, Transport (2), and Slave (Hunt) abilities.

12 Super-heavies

12.1 Baneblade

Bristling with weapons, the Baneblade is more akin to a walking fortress than a tank. A symbol of the Imperium's armoured supremacy, a single one of these war machines can serve as the spearhead of an Astra Militarum offensive, or as an impregnable defensive point during the most stubborn resistances. Gifted with firepower as versatile as it is formidable, exceptionally thick armour, and a generator of almost unlimited endurance, the Baneblade has been deployed on every theatre of war for millennia. When a Baneblade arrives on the battlefield, it invariably becomes the centre of the Imperial battle line. Guardsmen and other armour remain in its reassuring shadow while the enemy flees at the sight of the steel monster.

Its Baneblade Cannon and Lascannons have the Turret ability, while its Demolisher Cannon has the Reduces Cover (−3) ability. The Baneblade has the Wounds (3), DR (5+), and Slave (Nest) abilities.

				Twin Heavy Bolters	45 cm	3	4+	−1

12.2 Macharius

The Macharius belongs to a variety of so-called “second-generation” Baneblades. These are built on Forge Worlds that wish to obtain large military contracts, but that do not possess the STC data required to construct true Baneblades. Only a handful of Forge Worlds still manufacture Baneblades of the same design as those used during the Great Crusade, and the Adeptus Mechanicus of Mars keeps a close watch on the Forge Worlds authorised to access these data.

The Battle Cannon has the Turret ability. The Macharius has the DR (6+), Wounds (2), and Slave (Nest) abilities.

12.3 Shadowsword

While many super-heavy vehicles excel in short-range battles, where their thick armour allows them to withstand the enemy's attacks, the Shadowsword is designed to annihilate its targets swiftly. Equipped with a Volcano Cannon, one of the most formidable weapons ever mounted on a tank, the Shadowsword is so feared that its mere appearance on the battlefield is often enough to put the enemy to flight. As a Shadowsword advances, the roar of its engines is drowned by the scream of the Volcano Cannon's generators as they power up. The red beam that pierces the dust of the battlefield shears through infantry, armour, and xenos monstrosities alike.

The Volcano Cannon has the Damage (+2) ability, and the Lascannons have the Turret ability. The Shadowsword has the Wounds (3), DR (5+), and Slave (Nest) abilities.

12.4 Mole

The Mole is a mid-sized tunneller capable of transporting up to 60 men from underground and emerging at the heart of the enemy ranks to disgorge troops as close as possible to the fighting. Once it has broken the surface, it can provide fire support to the disembarked troops thanks to its medium-range armament.

Its Multiple Launcher has the Artillery ability. The Mole has the Attached Transport, Deep Strike (2), Wounds (2), Transport (12), and Slave (Hunt) abilities.

13 Heavy Artillery

13.1 Off-Table Artillery

This also represents a long-range mass psychic attack deployed by Psykers inhabited by the Hive Mind. The Psychic Barrage has a cost in Destruction Points instead of an army points cost and may be used only by Forward Observers. See the General Rules for further details.

The Psychic Barrage uses a Template (7.5 cm) and is a Psychic Attack.

14 Fortifications

Fortifications are fortified positions, which are either built in advance or dropped from orbit.
